Writing up qualitative research Kristi Winters

November 12th, 2018 - Tables are used to present information such as theoretical information or data from your research findings. It is not usually appropriate to present raw data in the Results section; the information would be meaningless to the lay reader or difficult to extract. Tables require you to do some of the work for the reader. In a table you present a summary of your data.

Analysis and write up of qualitative data

November 4th, 2018 - Write up of a grounded theory study follows more of a narrative format than traditional quantitative research reports. While the concerns of the researcher that led to the study usually open the piece, they are often more closely tied to the researcher personally than in quantitative studies.
